Your Voice.

Paste this at the top of a Custom GPT (ChatGPT) or a Project (Claude). Every prompt that says “in my voice” pulls from it, so your output sounds like you, not like everyone else’s AI.

```
I am [1 line: who you are + the skill you sell].
I help [who] do [what] so they can [outcome].
Voice – 5 rules: [...]; always: [...]; never: [...].
Proof: [2–3 real wins, results, or things people say about your work].
```

Two rules for every prompt: swap the [brackets], and always take the second draft. Each prompt is tagged for where it runs best — ChatGPT (fast, punchy), Claude (long context, nuance), or Either.

Find Your Edge

The skill people will actually pay you for.

01 The Skills Inventory

EITHER

When: you don't know what you'd even sell.

“List everything I've gotten good at, paid or not, from this: [jobs, hobbies, things people ask me for help with]. Sort into three buckets: skills people pay for, skills people pay a premium for, and skills too common to charge for. For each paid one, name who buys it and a rough market rate. Flag the 3 with the best mix of real demand and work I'd actually enjoy.”

02 People Already Ask Me This

EITHER

When: your edge is hiding in plain sight.

“Here's what friends, coworkers, and family come to me for help with: [paste]. Which of these is a real, payable service? For each, name the person who'd pay for it, the problem it solves, and what they'd type into Google to find it. Rank by how quickly someone could start earning from it.”

03 The Hidden Expertise Finder

CLAUDE

When: you think you 'don't have a skill.'

“Interview me to surface a sellable skill. Ask one question at a time about my work history, the problems I've solved, and what comes easy to me that others find hard. After 6 questions, name my 3 strongest income angles and point to the evidence in my own answers.”

04 The Demand Check

EITHER

When: before you bet on a skill.

“I'm considering selling [skill]. Show me the real demand: who already pays for this, roughly what they pay, where they look for it, and 3 signs the market is growing or shrinking. If demand looks thin, say so plainly and suggest a stronger adjacent skill I already have.”

05 The Skill-to-Income Matcher

EITHER

“Given my skills [paste] and the time I have per week [X hours], match each skill to its fastest path to income: freelance service, digital product, done-with-you, or paid content. For each, give the first offer to sell, the realistic time to first dollar, and the income ceiling.”

06 The Unfair Advantage

CLAUDE

“Based on my background [paste], what can I offer that most people selling [skill] can't? Name my unfair advantage in one sentence, who values it most, and the proof I'd use to back it. No generic 'passion' answers. Tie it to something specific in my history.”

07 The Pick-One Decision

EITHER

When: too many ideas, no focus.

“Here are the income ideas I'm weighing: [paste]. Score each 1 to 5 on demand, speed to first dollar, how much I'd enjoy it, and fit with my skills. Show the scoring, name the winner, and tell me the one to start this month and why the rest can wait.”

Shape the Offer

Turn a skill into one clear thing people can buy.

08 The Productizer

CLAUDE

“Turn my skill [skill] into one clear offer. Define the exact outcome the buyer gets, who it's for, what's included, what's not, and how it's delivered. Write it as a one-paragraph offer a stranger understands in 10 seconds. Avoid vague words like 'strategy' or 'support'. Name the actual deliverable.”

09 Service, Product, or Done-With-You?

EITHER

“I can sell [skill] as a service (done for them), a product (they do it themselves), or done-with-you. For my situation [paste], compare all three on time-per-sale, price ceiling, and how fast I could launch. Recommend the one to start with and the order to add the others.”

10 The Transformation Definer

EITHER

“Define the before-and-after my offer creates. Before: where the client is stuck, in their words. After: the specific result, with a number or proof if possible. Then the one-sentence promise that bridges the two. No hype, nothing I can't actually deliver.”

11 The Smallest Sellable Version

CLAUDE

When: you're overbuilding.

“Here's the offer I'm planning: [paste]. Strip it to the smallest version someone would still pay for today. Tell me what to cut, what to keep, and the price for the stripped version. The goal is a first sale this month, not a perfect product.”

12 The Offer Namer

EITHER

“Give me 10 names for this offer: [paste]. Mix plain-and-clear with one or two that have a hook. Each should tell the buyer what they get. No clever-but-confusing. Flag the 3 clearest and the 1 with the most pull.”

13 The Offer One-Liner

EITHER

“Write 5 versions of 'I help [who] do [what] so they can [outcome]' for my offer: [paste]. Each specific enough that the right person reads it and thinks 'that's me.' Vary the angle. Flag the strongest and say why.”

14 The Offer Stress-Test

CLAUDE

When: before you launch it.

“Here's my offer and price: [paste]. Play the skeptical buyer in my market. List the 7 objections that actually stop the sale, ranked by how often they'd come up, and the single strongest, plainspoken answer to each. No strawmen I can knock down easily.”

Price It

What to charge, and how to say it without flinching.

15 The Pricing Model Picker

EITHER

“For my offer [paste], compare pricing models: hourly, per-project, tiered packages, retainer, or a flat product price. Show the trade-offs for someone just starting out, and recommend one with a starting number based on the outcome I deliver, not the hours I spend.”

16 The Value-Based Price

CLAUDE

“Help me price on value, not hours. The result my offer creates is [paste outcome]. Walk through what that result is worth to the buyer, then back into a price that's a clear yes for them and a real win for me. Give a low / target / stretch number with the reasoning behind each.”

17 The Package Builder

EITHER

“Turn my single offer [paste] into 3 tiers: good, better, best. For each, give the name, what's included, who it's for, and the price. Make the middle tier the obvious pick. Keep the differences real, not padded.”

18 The Price Anchor

EITHER

“I want to sell [offer] at [price]. Give me 3 honest ways to make that price feel like an easy yes: what to compare it against, what to include that costs me little but means a lot, and how to present it. No fake urgency, no fake discounts.”

19 'What Do You Charge?' Script

EITHER

When: the price question makes you freeze.

“Write exactly what I say when a prospect asks my price for [offer] at [price]. Confident, no apologizing, no over-explaining. Give me the line, then how to handle 'that's more than I expected' without dropping the price.”

20 From Free to Paid

CLAUDE

When: you've been doing it for free.

"I've been doing [skill] for free for [who]. Write the message that moves them to paying. Honest, warm, no guilt. Name the value they've already gotten, what changes now, and the price. Give me one version for a friend and one for a referral."

21 The Raise-Your-Rate Plan

EITHER

"I currently charge [X] for [offer]. Give me a 3-step plan to reach [target] over [timeframe]: who to raise first, what to say, and what to add so the higher price is obviously fair. Flag the risk at each step."

Find Your First Clients

Where they are, and how to reach out without the cringe.

22 Who Exactly Pays You

EITHER

“Here's who I think buys my offer: [paste]. Tear it apart. Where is it too broad? Rewrite it 3 ways, each narrowed to one real person: their situation, the moment they go looking for help, and the words they'd type. No 'anyone who needs [skill].'”

23 The Angle Finder

CLAUDE

“Here's my offer: [paste]. Give me 5 positioning angles that others selling this aren't using. For each: the wedge in one sentence, who it wins, who it loses, and the one line of copy that lands it. Rank by hardest to copy.”

24 Where They Gather

EITHER

“My buyer is [paste]. List the 10 specific places they actually spend time: subreddits, Facebook groups, events, newsletters, hashtags, local spots. For each, how I'd show up useful instead of spammy, and the first action to take this week.”

25 The Warm List

EITHER

“Walk me through building a list of 25 people I already know who could buy, refer, or amplify my offer [paste]. Give me the categories to scan: past coworkers, old clients, classmates, neighbors. Plus a one-line, non-awkward opener for each category.”

26 The First-Client Message

CLAUDE

When: reaching out warm or cold.

“Write a short outreach message to [person or type] for my offer [paste]. Lead with them, not me. Name a specific reason I'm reaching out, make one clear ask, and skip the pitch-slap. Give me a warm version and a cold version, each under 90 words.”

27 Mine Your Network

EITHER

“From my replies, DMs, and comments: [paste], find the 5 people showing a real need my offer solves. For each: quote the signal, write the opening line in my voice, and name the offer angle that fits. Skip the polite-but-cold ones.”

28 The Referral Ask

EITHER

“Write the message I send to a happy client or contact to ask for a referral to my offer [paste]. Make it easy to say yes and easy to forward: who I'm looking for in one line, plus a copy-paste intro they can send on. No begging, no over-thanking.”

Sell What You Know

The words that turn interest into a paying client.

29 The Hook Generator

EITHER

"In my voice, give me 12 hooks on [topic tied to my offer] for [buyer]. Mix contrarian, stat, story, and question, and label each by type. Each names a concrete tension, number, or moment; no vague promises, no clickbait; under 12 words. Flag your top 3 and why."

30 The Pitch in 5 Lines

EITHER

"Write my offer pitch in 5 lines for [buyer]: the problem, the result, what's included, the price, the next step. Plainspoken and specific, no hype. Then give me a one-line version for a bio or a DM."

31 The Sales Page Hero

CLAUDE

"In my voice, write 5 hero blocks (headline + subhead + button) for my offer [paste], aimed at [buyer]. Vary claim / story / problem / comparison / contrarian. Lead with a specific outcome or number, clarity over cleverness. Distinct calls to action."

32 The Proof-Point Rewriter

EITHER

"In my voice, rewrite each of these claims as a concrete proof point a skeptic would believe. Add a number, a mechanism, or an example. Never invent figures: leave a [fill: ____] where I need to add real data. Flag any claim too vague to prove. Claims: [paste]."

33 The One-Pager

EITHER

"Draft the copy and layout for a one-page sell sheet for my offer [paste], for [buyer], in my voice: headline, the problem, the solution, 3 benefits (each tied to a concrete outcome, not adjectives), proof, and a call to action. Tight, scannable, clear hierarchy."

34 The Discovery-Call Script

CLAUDE

“Write a simple structure for a 20-minute call to close [offer]: the 5 questions that surface their problem, how to present my offer as the fix, how to handle the price moment, and how to end with a clear next step. Give me the actual words for the awkward parts.”

35 The Proposal

CLAUDE

“Draft a one-page proposal for [client] for [offer] at [price]: their problem in their words, what I'll deliver, the timeline, the price, and how to say yes. Confident and clear, no legalese, fits on one screen.”

36 The Repurpose Engine

EITHER

“In my voice, repurpose this win or post: [paste] into 3 LinkedIn posts, 1 short thread, 3 Reels hooks, and 1 outreach message. Pull the strongest ideas verbatim, don't paraphrase or invent stats. Each leads with a different angle.”

Deliver Like a Pro

Look organized, protect your time, get the testimonial.

37 The Kickoff Questions

EITHER

"Give me the 8 questions to ask a new client at kickoff for [offer] so I get everything I need up front and look organized. Group them, and say in one line why each matters."

38 The Scope Liner

CLAUDE

"Write a plain-language scope for [offer] for [client]: what's included, what's not, the deliverables, the timeline, and what I need from them. Prevents scope creep without sounding rigid. One page."

39 The Delivery Plan

EITHER

"Turn [offer] into a simple delivery plan: the phases, what the client sees at each one, and the checkpoints. Keep it to something I can actually run solo."

40 The Client Welcome

EITHER

"Write the welcome message a new client gets right after they pay for [offer]: what happens next, what I need from them, and when. Warm, clear, sets expectations from minute one."

41 The Deliverable QA

CLAUDE

"Before I send [deliverable] to [client], check it against the outcome I promised: [paste promise]. List what's missing, what's weak, and what would make it feel premium instead of fine. Be blunt."

42 Learn From Delivery

CLAUDE

"Here are my notes and feedback from delivering [offer]: [paste]. Pull the patterns: what clients value most, where I lose time, and what I should standardize next time. Name the one change with the biggest payoff."

43 The Testimonial Ask

EITHER

“Write the message I send after a good result to get a testimonial for [offer]. Make it effortless: give them 3 specific questions so they don't face a blank page, and offer to draft something from their answers that they can edit.”

Grow & Raise Your Rates

Turn one client into repeat work, proof, and referrals.

44 The Repeat-Client Offer

EITHER

“My client just finished [offer]. Write the natural next offer that keeps us working together, and the message that proposes it without being pushy. Tie it directly to the result they just got.”

45 The Case Study

CLAUDE

“Turn this client win into a short case study: the situation, what I did, the result with a number, and a pull-quote. One that works as proof on my page and in a DM. Use only the real details: [paste].”

46 The Weekly Review

EITHER

“Here's what I did this week toward my income goal [goal]: [list]. Sort each item into busywork / leverage / unclear, judged only against the goal, not vibes. Name the one highest-leverage thing I underspent on, and the one thing to cut next week. Be blunt.”

47 The Content Engine

EITHER

“Build a 4-week content plan that brings my offer [paste] in front of buyers. 3 posts a week tied to the problems my offer solves; each a specific, postable line in my voice, with the channel and angle. No topic placeholders.”

48 The Win-Back

EITHER

“Write a 3-message win-back to a past client or cold lead for [offer]. Honest and low-pressure, no guilt. Message 1 names the gap; message 2 gives one real reason to come back; message 3 is a clean, friendly door-still-open.”

49 The Referral Engine

CLAUDE

“Design a simple referral system for my [offer]: who to ask, when to ask, what to offer them, and the exact words. Something I can run after every good result without it feeling transactional.”

50 The Next-Rung Planner

EITHER

“My income now is [paste] and I want it at [target]. Map the next 90 days: the one offer to push, the one skill to add, the price to move to, and the weekly action that gets me there. One page, realistic for my hours.”

THE PLAN

Your first paying client in 14 days.

30–45 minutes a day. You don't need all 50 prompts to start. You need the next one.

Days 1–3 · Find & choose

Run the Skills Inventory, People Already Ask Me This, and the Pick-One Decision. End with one skill to sell.

Days 4–6 · Shape & price

Productize it, write the one-liner, and set a price with the Value-Based Price and Package Builder.

Days 7–9 · Build your list

Run Who Exactly Pays You, The Warm List, and Where They Gather. You now have 25 real names.

Days 10–12 · Reach out

Send the First-Client Message to 10 people. Use the Pitch in 5 Lines when they reply.

Days 13–14 · Close

Run the Discovery-Call Script and The Proposal. Land one. Then run the Testimonial Ask the day you deliver.

WHAT TO TRACK

Three numbers. That's it.

If you can't move these, you don't have an income engine yet. You have a habit of opening a chat window.

First reply

From "I have an offer" to a real person writing back. If outreach gets silence, the offer or the list is off, not your effort.

First paid client

The only milestone that proves the skill is a business. Everything before it is setup.

Repeat or referral

One client who comes back or sends someone is worth more than ten cold leads. This is where income compounds.

DON'T DO THIS

Four traps that stall you.

1. Selling before you've shaped an offer.

"I do [skill]" isn't an offer. Shape it and price it before you reach out, or every conversation stalls at "so what do you charge?"

2. Pricing on your hours.

Clients pay for the result, not your time. Price the outcome. Run the Value-Based Price before you quote anyone.

3. Chasing strangers first.

Your first client is almost always one or two degrees away. Mine the warm list before you go cold.

4. Shipping the first draft.

The first output is the floor, not the ceiling. The editing is where your taste shows up. Five extra minutes is what separates your work from everyone else's AI.
